

Noor Al-Rubaye is a nutritionist by training and a budding public health professional holding a Master's in Public Health (MPH) degree from Imperial College London (ICL). Her specialty is in health systems and services, and the key themes of her focus are health economics and policy, quality improvement in health care, health intelligence, and population health improvement. She currently serves as a Research & Communication consultant at the SHE Center.

Her research and career interests lie at the nexus between researchers and health policy and decisions-makers.

Reaching ideal healthcare quality and health equity is an end goal she is aspiring to learn about and contribute to. Noor is very keen on advancing her career in public health research, particularly health economics, quality improvement and applying best practice public health, and health policy and management.

With her knowledge, middle eastern origins, and experience as a world traveller, Noor's passion and ultimate purpose is to contribute to the promotion of health innovation and research, standardization of the healthcare practices, and the quality of the healthcare community in the Middle East and North Africa (MENA) region.
