

Sammi O'Reilly is a student intern for the Science Health Education (SHE) Center focusing on the Center's grant applications, webinar coordination, with an individual project aimed at understanding the effects and importance of grassroots initiatives and female leadership in achieving the UN's 17 Sustainable Development Goals. She is a rising Senior at Washington University in St. Louis majoring in Global Health & Environment, and a member of the Medicine & Society program that curates an education in health involving traditional medicine, healthcare policy, and global interventionist ethics.